

Assembling the Valuable and Vulnerable: North Studies in the Circumpolar North

The Circumpolar North is a region of critical importance for both its environmental and cultural significance. It is home to a diverse range of ecosystems, including Arctic tundra, boreal forests, and marine environments. The region is also home to a number of Indigenous peoples, who have a long history of living in and managing the land. In recent years, the Circumpolar North has become increasingly important for economic development, as well as for scientific research.

The North Studies program at the University of Alaska Fairbanks is dedicated to understanding the complex challenges and opportunities facing the Circumpolar North. The program brings together scholars from a variety of disciplines, including anthropology, biology, economics, geography, and political science. Together, they work to develop a comprehensive understanding of the region and its people.
