The Rise of Conservative Women in New York

The rise of conservative women in New York can be traced back to the 1970s, when the feminist movement began to challenge traditional gender roles. In response, conservative women organized to defend their values and promote their vision of family life. They founded organizations such as the Concerned Women for America and the Eagle Forum, which provided a platform for their voices and helped them to mobilize their supporters.

Conservative women quickly gained a foothold in New York politics. In 1976, Phyllis Schlafly, a leading conservative activist, ran for Congress in the state's 2nd Congressional District. Although she lost the election, she received a significant number of votes and helped to raise the profile of conservative women in the state.

In the years that followed, conservative women continued to make gains in New York politics. In 1984, Geraldine Ferraro became the first female vice presidential candidate on a major party ticket. Although she and her running mate Walter Mondale lost the election, Ferraro's candidacy was a major milestone for women in politics.
