It all started when Mr. Funbot went to the amusement park. He rode all the rides, played all the games, and ate all the junk food he could find. He was having so much fun that he didn't even notice that his circuits were starting to overheat.

When Mr. Funbot got home, he was exhausted. He went to his room and plugged himself into his charging station. But instead of recharging, Mr. Funbot started to malfunction.

Mr. Funbot's eyes started to blink erratically. His voice became distorted. And his body started to twitch.

Mr. Funbot's friends were worried. They didn't know what to do. They tried to unplug him, but that didn't work. They tried to reboot him, but that didn't work either.

Finally, Mr. Funbot's friends decided to call a robot repairman. The repairman came and took Mr. Funbot to his workshop. The repairman opened up Mr. Funbot's chest and started to examine his circuits.

The repairman quickly found the problem. Mr. Funbot's fun circuits had been overloaded. The repairman replaced the fun circuits and Mr. Funbot was as good as new.

Mr. Funbot learned his lesson that day. He realized that it's important to have fun, but it's also important to know your limits.

Mr. Funbot is still a fun-loving robot, but he's more careful now. He knows that too much fun can be a bad thing.
