There are a number of reasons why Russia's bid to host the 2024 FIFA World Cup was unsuccessful. One reason is that Russia has a history of human rights abuses. In recent years, Russia has been criticized for its treatment of LGBTQ people, its annexation of Crimea, and its support for the Syrian government.

Another reason why Russia's bid was unsuccessful is that the country is currently under sanctions from the United States and the European Union. These sanctions were imposed in response to Russia's annexation of Crimea and its support for the Syrian government.

Finally, Russia's bid was unsuccessful because it was not considered to be a strong bid. The United States, Canada, and Mexico have a much more developed infrastructure than Russia, and they are all considered to be more stable countries.

Despite the fact that Russia's bid to host the 2024 FIFA World Cup was unsuccessful, the country remains a major force in world football. Russia is the reigning world champion, and they are expected to be one of the favorites to win the 2026 FIFA World Cup.

Russia's Football Infrastructure

Russia has a strong football infrastructure. The country has a number of world-class stadiums, including the Luzhniki Stadium in Moscow, which hosted the 2018 FIFA World Cup Final.

Russia also has a number of professional football clubs. The most successful club in Russia is CSKA Moscow, which has won the Russian Premier League 13 times.

In addition to its world-class stadiums and professional football clubs, Russia also has a strong youth football development system. The country has a number of youth academies that produce some of the best young players in the world.

Russia's National Football Team

The Russian national football team is one of the most successful teams in the world. The team has won the FIFA World Cup once, in 2018, and they have finished as runners-up twice, in 1966 and 1994.

The Russian national football team is currently ranked second in the FIFA World Rankings. The team is led by captain Artem Dzyuba, who plays for Zenit Saint Petersburg.

Russia is expected to be one of the favorites to win the 2026 FIFA World Cup. The team has a strong squad, and they are playing with a lot of confidence.

Russia's Chances of Hosting the 2026 FIFA World Cup

Russia is not currently considered to be a favorite to host the 2026 FIFA World Cup. The United States, Canada, and Mexico are all considered to be stronger candidates.

However, Russia could still be a dark horse candidate to host the tournament. The country has a strong football infrastructure, and they are a major force in world football.

If Russia is able to improve its human rights record and resolve its current political issues, the country could be a strong contender to host the 2026 FIFA World Cup.
