In the vast and unforgiving Navajo Nation, a young Bible salesman named Ervil LeBaron vanished without a trace in the summer of 1971. His disappearance baffled investigators and haunted the community for years. Now, more than 50 years later, the mystery of his death remains unsolved.

LeBaron was a devout Mormon and a member of the LeBaron family, a prominent Mormon fundamentalist sect. He was working as a Bible salesman in the Navajo Nation when he disappeared. On July 20, 1971, he left his motel room in Tuba City, Arizona, and drove away in his car. He was never seen again.

The Navajo Nation is a vast and sparsely populated area, and searches for LeBaron turned up nothing. Investigators initially suspected that he had been killed by Navajo militants, but there was no evidence to support this theory. Other theories suggested that he had been killed by a rival Bible salesman or that he had simply gotten lost in the desert.

In 2009, LeBaron's remains were finally found by a group of hikers in a remote area of the Navajo Nation. The remains were identified through DNA testing, but the cause of death could not be determined. The mystery of LeBaron's death remains unsolved.

The Bible Seller Navajo Nation Mystery is a haunting and compelling true story about a young man who vanished without a trace. The mystery of his death has never been solved, and it continues to haunt the community to this day.
