Toni Cade Bambara was an American author, activist, and filmmaker known for her work on African American life and culture. Her work is often characterized by its use of language, its focus on the everyday lives of Black people, and its commitment to social justice.

Practices of Liberation

Practices of Liberation is a collection of essays, articles, and lectures that explore the experiences and struggles of African Americans. Bambara's work is often highly critical of the racism and oppression that Black people face, but it is also filled with hope and resilience.

The essays in Practices of Liberation cover a wide range of topics, including the history of slavery, the civil rights movement, and the experiences of Black women. Bambara's writing is often personal and reflective, and she draws on her own experiences to illuminate the broader issues that she discusses.

African American Life Series

Practices of Liberation is part of the African American Life Series, which was published by Random House in the 1990s. The series was designed to provide a comprehensive overview of the African American experience, and it includes works by a variety of authors, including W.E.B. Du Bois, James Baldwin, and Maya Angelou.

The African American Life Series is an important resource for anyone who wants to learn more about the history and culture of African Americans. The series provides a broad range of perspectives on the African American experience, and it is an invaluable tool for understanding the challenges and triumphs that Black people have faced.
