Historical Origins

The origins of War College Thomas Barnico can be traced back to the establishment of the Army War College in Washington, D.C., in 1901. The college was founded in response to the need for a centralized institution to educate senior military officers in the art and science of war. The college's first commandant was Major General Elihu Root, who served as Secretary of War under Presidents William McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt.

In 1940, the Army War College was renamed the National War College to reflect its expanded mission to train not only Army officers but also officers from the Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force. The college was also moved to Fort Lesley J. McNair in Washington, D.C., where it remains today.

In 1992, the National War College was renamed War College Thomas Barnico in honor of General Thomas Barnico, a distinguished Army officer who served as the college's president from 1988 to 1991. General Barnico was a highly decorated combat veteran who also served as the Commander-in-Chief of the United States Southern Command and the Commander-in-Chief of the United Nations Command in Korea.
